USSR WEATHER AND CROP REPORTS
20 - 26 SEPTEMBER 1951

22 September 1951

On 20 and 21 September, overcast weather with rain prevailed in most of the European USSR. Quite heavy rains fell in Moldavia, most of the Ukraine, the Crimea, and the central European USSR. During the first 12 hours of 21 September, precipitation in the southern Ukraine amounted to 12-15 millimeters locally. As a result, the upper layers of the soil were moistened well and favorable conditions created for the growth and development of winter sowing.

Showers were recorded also in the Baltic countries, Belorussia, and the extreme northern and northeastern regions. Dry and slightly cloudy weather continued in the southeastern European USSR and in most of the North Caucasus.

It became much cooler in the western and southwestern European USSR.

Dry and warm weather prevailed in most of West Siberia and Kazakhstan.

25 September 1951

On 23 and 24 September, comparatively cold, mostly cloudy weather with local rain was observed in the northwestern half of the European USSR. On 23 September, quite heavy rains were recorded in Arkhangel'sk Oblast, the Crimea, and in some areas of Stavropol' Kray. The rains moistened the upper layers of the soil and created favorable conditions for the growth and development of winter sowings. In the southeastern and eastern regions, the weather was slightly cloudy and mostly dry. During the first 12 hours of 24 September, rain fell in the northeastern and locally in the central European USSR.

During the night, frosts were recorded in the Baltic countries, north-eastern Ukraine, southeastern part of the central European USSR, and locally in the Middle and Lower Volga regions.
